We have developed a new fluorescence detection system for the mutation site in the alpha-globin gene. The system consists of two primers, each of which was designed to attach to the 3'-end of the alpha-globin gene. One primer was labeled with a chain-terminating dye, 5-(3-carboxy-4-hydroxyphenyl) fluorescein, and the other primer was labeled with digoxigenin. We used the two primers, labeled with dyes with different fluorescences, to form a DNA duplex. Then, the dyes were released from the duplex to diffuse through the gel medium, and we monitored their fluorescence decrease at the mutation site. With this system, we easily detected both missense and frameshift mutations in the alpha-globin gene. In conclusion, our system can be used for detection of site-specific mutations in the alpha-globin gene.
