Data\Default\Extensions\f2348e4e-75f7-4a73-9387-fda01c89b764\client_default_library.dll"; I have a feeling Navisworks has moved, since last time I used it and it was never a small program. The St. Louis Blues are already getting to work on the 2016-2017 season. TSN's Darren Dreger reported the Blues have interest in Ducks centre Ryan Kesler, but they also expressed some interest in Hurricanes centre Jordan Staal. Barry Trotz and the Blues were built on a power game with Stajan, Mats Zuccarello and T.J. Oshie leading the way. Kesler would fit right in, with his experience and leadership. It's hard to imagine the Blues going to another Pacific Division team with a weaker group of forwards, but having two power forwards on the roster would be a great start. The Hurricanes don't have a ton of assets, but having a strong centre group would be a nice addition to their roster. Staal is a proven forward that can play in all situations, and he's got skill to go along with the grit. The Devils didn't make much of a splash in free agency, but they used a big trade to acquire forward Adam Henrique. They also got a little wild with their cap management, nearly $2 million over the cap until they got Ben Lovejoy's $4.25 million contract extended for one year. Although they aren't good enough to challenge the Blackhawks for the top seed in the Central, the Devils will be a solid club. Henrique has all of the tools to be a top-six forward in the NHL. He's big, he has some speed, and he's a pretty good skater, although he's probably not a first-line player. Having Staal on their side should be a big plus, as the young forwards are going to need lots of support. They'll already be counting on Zuccarello, who is entering his prime
