She was anxious to create her own independent career. Towards this end, she and Jimmy had set up their own booking agency, the Gladys Warner Syndicate. This would enable Jimmy to expand his turf and also provide himself with a genuine source of income. (Walker worked on the club circuit in Chicago, St. Louis, and other clubs in the Midwest, where Jimmy was a booking agent and manager for such stars as Sophie Tucker. The above image is from p. 2 of Time magazine: Inside Out. In March 1953, after her husband's death in February, she was billed as The Mighty Anna in Atlantic City, NC and in February 1953, lived in East Orange, NJ. Ethel in "Between the Silences". According to The

New York Times, her last show closed in Chicago in June, 1958, and she then retired from singing to become an agent for the Tammany Central Committee. Anna, whose real name was Ethel Wright, was a vocalist at the Stratford Theater, Chicago; then at the Monticello Club and sometimes the Crystal Room. There are reports that she was once married to Eddie Robinson and that they had two children together, Mattie, an actress and Diane. She was also seen at the Lexington and the Copley Club in Chicago. She was only 47 years old when she died in 1959. On March 25, 1986, a Staten Island grand jury indicted her for receiving five grand larcenies over a two-year period in June 1983.

According to the indictment, she stole checks totaling $24,000. The court later dismissed the charges, saying that the statute of limitations had expired. A Los Angeles Times columnist wrote that the Manhattan district attorney was extremely harsh to harass her. There is no information in the press regarding her whereabouts after that. On October 2, 1987, she was indicted c6a93da74d
