exprimos aqui.id is a one-stop shop for testing your languages speaking ability. you can test yourself on phrases from various topics on one page, use those tests to compare yourself to other people or to the other languages youve studied. i found a very helpful online tutorial (in portuguese) here for those of us looking to read portuguese online on the bus, train, or other travel mode. its a great way to keep your mind off the boring road trips and that annoying playlists on the radio. once youve mastered the basics, there are quite a few sites to help you further your understanding. dailydiveinto.com is a bit like an esl dictionary that supports all the major language families on each page. its a little pop-up window when youve searched that shows all the linked pages. think of it as wikipedia for language. you can expand and collapse what you want and click on pages to read. it works perfectly on mobile, and also a great companion to any text-to-speech app. for me, the spokespeak dictionary is the best, its huge with text-to-speech capabilities. being able to easily play the list of words on my phone or watch them on a computer opened my eyes to the different word usages that i had never thought of. its almost as if you were listening to a native speaker talk. its also a great app for kids. there is an ipoe app for you youngsters, too. just be sure to be aware of how they handle deletions and what happens when you start typing. the biggest hurdle is when its all in portuguese, not often found on many phones/devices. the portuguese internet archive is an amazing online resource, beyond what you may have seen before. the portuguese government launched it in 2005 to make all the text in the portuguese language accessible, translated into english, and easy to find. its a collection of every page ever published on portuguese websites on the web. it includes scholarly publications, translations, political speeches, and every other kind of content that you can find in portuguese. its searchable via a web browser or, with a tiny bit of configuration on their end, via a computer app. gives you portuguese in history, social sciences, politics, economics, sports, magazines, children, and so on. theres a bit of lag time depending on the internet connection (keep an eye on it), and it also uses a bit of javascript to render the pages. its a great way to get an overview, but its not as useful for reading the original articles.

oh, and, whoops, i forgot to mention the one resource that i wouldnt advise using as a substitute for a good real book or resource in order to learn spanish! a good and inexpensive (free) resource is google translate . it still requires a web connection, but its really good (much better than the microsoft one), and i think you get more context if you use it in conjunction with a good book or resource. but, again, please, do not substitute a real book or resource! i hope these resources help. if you have any other ways to watch or read online subtitled media, please let me know! im always interested in hearing about websites or resources that others have found useful. the last few months, i've been working on understanding how you can use your feelings about what you want, or your intent to act on the things you want. the main concept is that if you can understand the why of something, you can apply that to any situation. daniel tells it like it is, if youre looking for a white, straightforward, no-bullshit,no-jingoist look at america, look no further. for just $1 a day, you can follow the two-way on your podcast player of choice. each day, we sit down, have a sensible conversation about what really matters, cover topics of interest to all americans, and then let you listen to that conversation over the course of a few hours. it really is one of the best podcasts out there, and well worth your time. on this episode, we discuss everything from the latest trump tweets, to sports, to the use of guns, to whether or not people should leave the country. 5ec8ef588b
