Modern South Africa, with its gross national product (GNP) rising more than ninefold between 1961 and 1990, has seen a "miracle" of economic growth. However, South Africa's new poor constitute a large and growing proportion of the population. The authors consider the major factors shaping South Africa's new poor, in particular, widening inequalities in income and wealth, structural changes in employment, unskilled labour migration, and the increasing prevalence of HIV/AIDS. They conclude that South Africa's new poor are the products of economic and political transformations resulting in a decline in economic efficiency, a high proportion of the population living in poverty, significant disparities in health and education, widespread unemployment, and growing family breakdown. The authors argue that the new poor are too large and various to be dealt with through narrow measures aimed at simply reducing poverty and inequality, and also that their conditions and needs may not fall within the traditional definition of the "welfare state." In spite of these limitations, the authors argue that South Africa's new poor and the issues they raise need to be addressed, and that the new South Africa's ability to respond to these issues, particularly its position in the global economy, will depend in large measure on the actions to be taken. Conventionally, in a wafer laser processing step of processing, for example, a wafer glass by an excimer laser or the like, there is a wafer laser processing apparatus which is configured to perform a series of operations on a wafer or a plurality of wafers disposed on the wafer. Specifically, the wafer laser processing apparatus includes a processing tank, where a processing gas is stored; a lid body for opening and closing an opening provided in a front wall of the processing tank; a wafer holding arm for supporting a front surface of the wafer to put the wafer in and out of the processing tank; and a drive mechanism for moving the wafer holding arm in X, Y, and Z directions. In the wafer laser processing apparatus, the wafer is lowered into the processing tank and then the wafer holding arm is moved in the Z
