Do you wish your photos were better? Is your straight razor dull? Would you like to take a drag to that slant-eyed foreign dictator on your Apple Watch? The solution to all of these dark, dark mysteries is to put an end to the imperfect way we define light and shadow, and to harness the statistical miracles of modern computer science and graphic design. But that doesn't mean we have to lose the slew of great content the site has provided over the past years. From ridiculous celebrity photos to a video of a man desperately saying "I love you" to Jessica Alba while looking like a crazed, unhinged banshee through a flesh-eating virus, the site has been great—and necessary—fun for the fashion-obsessed. One of the site's founders, Gizmodo's Nick Denton, has confirmed that the site will carry on without Gawker's name due to the strength of the brand. "I'm not abandoning Gawker but raising a new one," he said.
